

I oppose loosening the rules designed to promote and protect diversity of media ownership. These rules were adopted to ensure that the public would receive a diverse range of viewpoints from the media, and not simply the opinions of a handful of media conglomerates.

To the FCC: I agree with the comments above, and would add that there is a growing re-birth of the recognition that the air waves are public property, not just some commodity to be carved up among the corporate giants. As such, media ownership rules need to be tightened, not loosened. Please do not place yourselves on the wrong side of history in this regard, and create a mess which will take more enlightened souls years to untangle. For God's sake, there are already too few corporations owning too many media outlets. Isn't that quite obvious?
